BOTH SIDES IN MAINE CLAIM BATTLE WON

Democrats Predict Tidal Wave; Republicans See 2,000 for Littlefield.

Special to the Boston American.

LEWISTON, Me., Sept. 8.—The closing of the most bitterly contested and spectacular political campaign that the State of Maine ever saw with this evening's meetings, finds the Republicans claiming the re-election of Governor Cobb by 10,000 and the re-election of Charles E. Littlefield by from 1,500 to 2,000.

On the other hand Democratic political workers assert that the feeling of the people on the liquor question and the assistance given them by the labor vote will manifest themselves in a tidal wave which will not stop until the whole Republican ticket is swept into the depths of defeat.

The pluralities quoted in the opening paragraph are not those of the political managers who are running the campaign. Cobb says that he will have something like his former plurality of 27,000, and Littlefield claims that his plurality of 2,400 will not be cut more than 1,000. The figures given above are those of very conservative men, who wish to be perfectly safe.

The Democratic hopes are based on Androscoggin, in which Lewiston is located, Sagadahoc, with Bath as its largest city, and Knox, with Rockland to draw from.

Two years ago Littlefield carried Androscoggin by 150 votes. Conservative Republicans are giving McGillicuddy from 500 to 1,000 in this county this year. Littlefield had a plurality of 1,400 in Sagadahoc, and it is thought that this will be cut in two. Littlefield carried Knox by fourteen, and it is believed that on the Congressional fight it will be an even break there. Old time majorities in Oxford of 2,000 and in Franklin of 1,400, with a probable even break in Lincoln, it is expected, by the close figuring Republicans, will return Mr. Littlefield to Washington.

Cuban Capital May Be Entered To-night

REBELS AT HAVANA

Troops on Armored Train Defeated by the Insurgent Army.

HAVANA, Sept. 8.—Havana is practically surrounded by insurgents. Hundreds of mounted armed men are just on the outskirts of the town. Many expect the capital may be entered to-night.

Pino Guerra and the government forces began an engagement at San Mateo, near Pinar del Rio, at 3 p. m. yesterday, and at 5 o'clock were still fighting the most important engagement of the revolution. Since then the telegraph line has been down. At midnight officials are using automobiles to rush reserve police and raw militia to the outskirts of the city, expecting an attack from that quarter.

The bands of Colonels Asbert, Lleonas, Smillie and Gans are closing in on this city. An attack on Asbert's forces by the government troops shortly after the commissioner's visit, with the arrest of two liberal leaders yesterday, have aroused the indignation of the insurgents. The forces which attacked Asbert were repulsed.

A spirited engagement is reported from Cienfuegos, in which the insurgents were victorious. Last night two railroad bridges were dynamited between Pinar del Rio and San Luis. Pino Guerra telephoned the station agent at Pinar del Rio not to send the passenger train out, as he did not wish innocent people to be injured.

Early to-day 250 men, 200 horses and two machine guns were sent to Pinar del Rio on a special train. This train carried two large cars covered with sheet iron, made especially for the government, with platforms on top for machine guns.

The forces under command of General Dias upon arriving at Kilometer post No. 165, between Puerto de Golpe and Los Ovas, on the military freight train which was detained by trains, found the track stalled by a freight train which was detained by a large body of insurgents. The latter opened fire on the military train,

GERMAN PRIEST MADE HEAD OF JESUIT ORDER

VICTORY FOR THE KAISER SEEN IN TO-DAY'S ELECTION OF THE "BLACK POPE."

ROME, Sept. 8.—Father Francis Wernz, rector of the Gregorian University, the "dark horse" candidate supported by the German delegates to the congregation of the Society of Jesus, was to-day elected general of the Jesuit order to succeed the late Father Martin.

The election of Father Wernz is regarded as a great victory for Kaiser William.

Father Wernz's election was forced by the German delegates, and only on ballot was required, the German priest receiving forty-two out of a total of eighty-one votes.

Father Rudolph Meyer of St. Louis was defeated by the refusal of the German delegations to support him. Compromise candidates were offered by the Italians and Spaniards to break the apparent deadlock. Father Vigo was the man put forward by the Spaniards and Father de la Motte by the Italians. Both men were rejected by the Germans, who urged political reasons in support of Father Wernz.

The Kaiser, they said, wanted a German general, and they pointed out that the friendship of the German ruler would be greatly beneficial to the order in Germany.

The new "Black Pope" was born in Rottweil, Wurtemberg, a kingdom in the southwest part of Germany, in 1842. He has been rector of the Gregorian University since 1904. He has made his home in Rome since 1880.

Father Wernz is an eloquent public speaker and has a great reputation as a scholar.

PARTY BOSSES AMAZED BY BIG CHURCHILL VOTE

DEFEAT OF SENATOR GALLINGER FOR DELEGATE ONLY PART OF VICTORY.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 8.—The Republican bosses have not yet recovered from the shock that accompanied the defeat of U. S. Senator Gallinger and his friends, as delegates to the State convention, by a delegation favorable to Winston Churchill for Governor. Twelve Churchill delegates out of a total of thirty-six were elected in this city last evening.

The ticket in Ward 4, Concord, where Gallinger met his Waterloo, included also F. S. Streeter, a party leader and member of the Republican national committee; James O. Lyford, naval officer of the port of Boston, who has been selected for chairman of the committee on resolutions of the approaching State convention; Samuel C. Eastman, who has been invited to preside at that convention; James S. Kleen and William E. Hood, both well known in municipal politics.

Gallinger is chairman of the Republican State Committee.

After he recovered from the shock the Senator said: "We are going to nominate Greenleaf notwithstanding the recent disasters. He has twice as many votes to-day as any other candidate and is a sure winner if his friends remain firm, as I expect they will."

Further reports show Churchill victorious. Wolfboro gave him four delegates by a majority of 100 and Newport gave him five out of the six delegates.

JURY FINDS "NO BILL" IN SCHAEFER CASE

FAILS TO RETURN INDICTMENT IN INVESTIGATION OF POLITICAL STORY.

A "no bill" report was returned by the Suffolk Grand Jury to-day on the "Schaefer" case, in which charges had been made by Henry T. Schaefer of Winchester that he had been approached by someone claiming to represent the Moran campaign, asking how much he would contribute to get the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor.

Vast Crowd Sees Great International Contest on the Thames.

Crews Were Even Choices When the Oars Dipped for the Four-Mile Battle.

PUTNEY, Eng., Sept. 8.—Harvard was beaten in the great international eight-oared race on the Thames to-day. The American crew made a gallant effort, but was outrowed by the Cambridge University men.

IDEAL WEATHER FOR GREAT ROWING RACE

PUTNEY, Eng., Sept. 8.—Ideal weather conditions prevailed for the boat race to-day between the varsity crews of Harvard and Cambridge.

Overhead the sun shone brightly, and there was not a ripple on the Thames. These conditions were favorable to Cambridge, as the light blue crew does not like rough water. On the strength of weather conditions, betting this morning jumped to 13 to 10 in favor of Cambridge.

Although the race was not scheduled to begin until 4:30 o'clock spectators began arriving on the scene early in the morning. By noon there were thousands waiting at all the advantageous positions along the course which is in the form of a huge horseshoe, four and a quarter miles long.

YANKEES CHEER FOR HARVARD.

Partisans of the two crews were out in great force and practically all the spectators wore the colors of their favorite. Naturally the light blue of Cambridge predominated. But Harvard supporters were to be found in large numbers among the English spectators and the Crimson made a good showing. Thousands of Americans likewise visited the course to cheer for their countrymen.

Harvard was out on the river during the morning for a ten-minute final practice trial. Starts only were attempted, and the Yankees showed great rapidity in getting away. Thousands of Americans who had already gathered along the course cheered the crew. Notwithstanding the odds against them in the betting, the Americans were serenely confident this morning of winning. Coach Wray in an interview this morning said:

"I have every confidence in the outcome. The crew is in prime condition and able to row the race of their lives. Every man will pull as few crews have pulled before for the whole distance."

Captain Filley had little to say.

"If Cambridge wins they will know they have been in a race," was his simple comment.

Coxswain Blagden said: "I know the course well, but intend to go over it again about an hour before the race to see how the tide is running and watch the eddies. I am confident we will not disappoint our supporters."

The race will start at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon, by English time. This makes the time in Boston 11:30. Naturally there will be some delay in starting, but it is figured that at the outside the Harvard supporters in Boston will know of the progress of the first mile as early as 12:30.

The umpire and starter for the race is Robert C. Lehmann, and F. Fenner, an official of the London Rowing Club, will be the judge at the finish. There will be no other officials except the men who are acting in connection with the police in keeping the river clear.

It has been arranged to allow only ten boats to follow the racers, and these will contain the press representatives and immediate friends of the crews and members of the rowing committee. It is figured that about 125 persons will see the race from these boats. The police boats will not follow the race until someone breaks the rules, their boats remaining at their respective stations.

Interest in the race is tremendous. Nothing else is talked of. All the hotels and inns are filled to overflowing and private houses are thronged with guests for the week end.

HARVARD WILL NOT SET PACE.

The Harvard men do not mean to kill themselves in the first two miles. They will, however, always keep in striking distance. Filley is a great fighter, and Harvard men believe if their crew once gets ahead the race will be all over.

Harvard is in good shape, but not so well conditioned as at New London. Morgan has had a cold ever since he came over. Richardson must still be careful of himself, although he says he is entirely well. Bacon, too, has not been at all bad.

Dr. Monahan says: "The men are fit to

HOW RACE WAS ROWED TOLD IN BULLETINS

PUTNEY, England, Sept. 8.—Race started at 4:29. Cambridge took the lead at the start. At the ½-mile mark Cambridge was leading. At mile mark Cambridge led. Cambridge held the advantage at 1½-mile mark. At two-mile mark Cambridge led.

Cambridge won, holding the lead to the finish in spite of the Americans' effort to get up. Cambridge won the toss and chose the Surrey course.

SOUTH BOSTON GIRL SWIMMER HAS CHALLENGED MISS ELEANORA SEARS

Miss Mary McDonough Wants Match Race with Society Girl Champion in Athletic Sports.

After a Summer of victories over the fastest women swimmers of Boston Miss Mary McDonough of No. 564 East Third street, South Boston, yesterday sent a challenge to Miss Eleanora Sears, the Boston and Newport society girl, North Shore champion, offering to meet her in a five-yard match race at any place and time that Miss Sears may name. The only conditions named in the challenge are that the race will take place during the month of September and that the distance will be limited to 100 yards.

The reason for the short distance stipulated in the challenge is that the low temperature of the water at the present time would make a long distance match almost impossible. Were it early in the season Miss McDonough would be willing to lengthen the distance to a half or even a mile race.

The possibility of a match race between these two famous women swimmers has for months attracted considerable attention in swimming circles throughout New England. Both Miss Sears and Miss McDonough have long since won their spurs as speed and long distance swimmers and each have a long string of victories to her credit. Superintendent Rowe of the L street baths is confident that his protege can cover any fair distance with any woman swimmer in New England, and while he does not underestimate the racing ability of Miss Sears, he feels positive that the race can be arranged the South Boston girl will give a good account of herself.

Prefers Newport for Race.

Miss McDonough has left the deciding of the place of battle to Miss Sears, only suggesting that the race take place either in Newport, Marblehead or Boston. Either of these three places will be satisfactory to Miss McDonough, but as the temperature of the water will be more acceptable in Newport she would prefer that place.

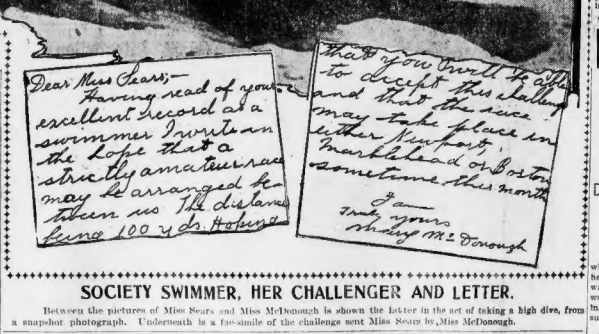
Miss McDonough has for the past three years been the acknowledged champion of the L Street Baths. Instructor Rowe has repeatedly stated that he saw in her more racing material than he had ever before perceived in a woman. Remarkable as have been some of the performances of Miss McDonough, still more wonderful do they appear when it is considered that she has been swimming but a little more than two years.

About four years ago little Mary McDonough, then only thirteen years of age, began her daily visits to the L Street Baths. With her girl companions she spent day after day paddling in the water, but while her playmates were satisfied to lay on the beach she was busily engaged in mastering the elementary swimming strokes. So fast was her progress that she attracted the attention of Instructor Rowe, who took the girl under his wing, and after a season of coaching saw that he had a pupil of remarkable swimming possibilities. Her progress has been rapid since, and this year there has been no one at the bath who was in her class, either as a speed or distance swimmer.

Anxious for Meeting.

In Miss Sears Miss McDonough will meet a foe worthy of her best efforts. For many seasons Miss Sears has been the recognized champion of the North Shore bathers and each Summer she has returned with victories over worthy rivals. Besides being a swimmer of wide repute, Miss Sears has proven her athletic ability on many occasions in other directions.

Miss McDonough is the daughter of Michael McDonough of No. 564 East Third street, South Boston, and is but seventeen years of age. "I don't like to talk," said Miss McDonough yesterday, as she came out of the water to greet the BOSTON AMERICAN reporter, "as I think it's better to spend my time swimming rather than talking. I can only say that I am most anxious to meet Miss Sears, and am sure that we could offer a race that would be worth witnessing. I have the highest regard for Miss Sears's swimming ability and thoroughly realize that she can give a hard struggle for most any distance. I want to meet her, though, and win or lose, I am sure that the race will be a fast one."



Dear Miss Sears,—
Having read of your excellent record as a swimmer I write to the hope that a strictly amateur race may be arranged between us the distance being 100 yds. Hoping that you will accept this challenge and that the race may take place in Marblehead or Boston sometime this month.
I am truly yours
Mary Mc Donough

and after sustaining a fire of twenty minutes, the train load of troops retreated to Palacios, five stations nearer Havana.

The wires at Pinar del Rio are down and the operator at Puerto de Golpe at 7:30 last night reported detonations in the direction of Las Ovas. Probably the bridge at that point has been blown up, thus preventing government troops from reaching Pinar del Rio by train, and necessitating a march about ten miles through the insurgents' country.

An armored train was awaiting instructions at Palacios at a late hour last night. General Rodrigues intended going there on a special engine, but abandoned the idea, wiring General Nuin in war until today for instructions. Government officials are struck dumb by the simultaneous effective blow of the insurgents and great flurry is apparent.

Thos. Guerra, it became known today, has formally notified General Menocal's emissaries that he will not accept the armistice and that he will not cease hostilities unless the government promises to annul the elections of December last. In spite of this decision another committee is going to Pinar del Rio to-morrow in an endeavor to persuade Guerra to come to Havana and treat for peace.

Guerra emphasized his answer to the government armistice by blowing up two bridges on the western railway, the cutting of railway communication beyond Pinar del Rio city and an attack on San Juan de Martinez. It is believed here to-day that San Juan de Martinez is in the hands of the insurgents and that the garrison, consisting of one hundred regular recruits and a small force of mounted rural guards, has been defeated or captured.

FRENCH CLERGY

VOTE POLICY OF PASSIVE RESISTANCE

PARIS, Sept. 8.—When the plenary council of French prelates adjourned yesterday to enable the members to return to their homes for the feast of the Virgin today no formal statement was given out announcing the decision reached regarding the course of action to be taken under the separation law. One reason for this was doubtless that no action taken would be binding without the Pope's approval.

A policy of passive resistance was decided upon.

$13,831,785 TO ADOPTED SON

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Out of the present fortune of $16,639,198 left by the will of William Ziegler, promotor of many polar expeditions, to the adopted son who bears his name and who was but fourteen years old when M. Ziegler died in May, 1905, $2,185,080 has been paid out by the executors in settlement of actions brought to have the will declared invalid.

Other payments reduce the amount the boy will get to $13,831,785.

William Ziegler, the adopted son, is in college. His prospects, owing much of his great fortune to carrying out polar enterprises of the father.

BOY SAYS HE WAS IN GRIP OF MODERN FAGIN

Deceived Woman Takes Him to Police, Who Capture Five in Chelsea Raid.

In information furnished by a woman who had been deceived and was in fear for her life, and by a boy who said their leader was a modern Fagin, five New Yorkers were captured in a raid on a Chelsea lodging house early to-day, and are held on suspicion of being professional pickpockets.

The woman lived in New York as the wife of the leader. Learning that she had been deceived by a mock marriage, she married and came to this city with an ex-crook who had reformed and become a truck driver here. The other men followed and annoyed and threatened her.

Last night she met on the street Jacob Stanton, a fifteen-year-old boy she had known in New York. He said he was held here virtually a prisoner by the man the woman feared and by the employed pickpockets at Revere Beach and Wonderland.

He was taken to Chief Watts and later to Chief Hudson of Chelsea, to whom he told his story, and the raid was made. Now the boy denies in every particular the confession he made to the police chief.

BROKE JAIL TO GO TO THE FAIR

Wiseman, who escaped from the city building while waiting trial on a charge of assaulting Deputy Beaulieu, telephoned the police yesterday that he would be on hand to-day for his trial. He said he went away because he wanted to go to the fair. Later he was found at the fair grounds and locked up in the city prison.

BICYCLIST HIT BY AUTO BADLY HURT

GLOUCESTER, Sept. 8.—Samuel Boulo, a laborer, who was run over by a big touring car on Western avenue, near Magnolia, last evening, is in a serious condition. It is said Boulo, on a bicycle, was on the left-hand side of the road and started to cross to the proper side and zigzagged, when the accident occurred. The machine bore the number 16,256, which is entered in the name of Arthur F. McArthur of Chicago.

DEATH OF MRS. SCHWAB, ILL, IS GETTING BETTER

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Mrs. Charles M. Schwab, who has been seriously ill at the Schwab mansion, is reported as out of danger. Dr. S. A. Brown, her physician, declined to discuss her illness other than to say that Mrs. Schwab was doing nicely.

row hard and stay to the finish. The men are all better than they were a week ago, and all have gone up in weight.

Cambridge will doubtless row a higher stroke than Harvard. All this talk about the long, slow English stroke is doubtless. The Harvard oars are in the water longer and the blade work is better than that of the English crew. The Americans, however, feather closer to the water, as that smooth water will be better for Harvard than a choppy river. Still the Harvard men handle themselves like veterans under any conditions.

At the conclusion of the race all the oarsmen go to the Ibis Rowing Club at Mortlake to dress, and from there both crews go to the Star and Garter, where the Oxford oarsmen have their headquarters.

A large curve in the river three-quarters of a mile from the start favors the crews to the Middlesex side again. The turn here is of great consequence and the crews shoot past the mile post, Dung wharf, the tiller is shoved down and they take the Surrey side once more. Then comes a long stretch to Hammersmith bridge. The crew on the Middlesex side, having the best of the course so far, loses it. They must take the bridge on a slant and afterwards have the straight course with a bend to Barnes bridge, two miles away.

After passing this bend comes Chiswick Eyot, where the crews pass to the Surrey side. The Thornycroft turpedo factory, Chiswick Ferry and Chiswick Church are landmarks now passing behind. Corney Reach is next in order, a difficult shoot to negotiate. The river narrows after this for a mile stretch to Barnes bridge, then the approach to Mortlake begins.

The crews now keep on the Middlesex side passing Duke's meadows and Lowther brewery, where many a professional crew has stopped to quench a thirst. From Barnes bridge the advantage rests with the crew on the Middlesex side—one hundred yards farther on lies the slip, the finishing line.

No. 2, 165; Closesmith, bow, 149; Scott, coxswain, 125. This made the average of the Cambridge crew 169 pounds, against 169⅝ for Harvard, the biggest individual difference being between the two coxswains, Scott weighing twenty-one pounds more than Blagden.

It was August 11 when the Harvard boatmen went to Putney, the scene of today's battle, and began a heavy siege of hard work for the final encounter, and being nearer the English metropolis gave all excellent chance for the Britishers to size up the character of the visiting oarsmen. Day after day immense throngs watched the progress of the Yankee paddlers and commented freely on their form and chances of winning.

Crimson's Good Trials.

It was not till the third time row of the Harvard eight, which came September 1, when a sensation was sprung, as the crew went over the four and one-quarter mile course in 18-47, equaling the racing record made only twice in the history of rowing on the Thames, in the years 1903 and 1900.

Up to this time the Englishmen had the upper hand as the favorites in the betting, but the odds swerved around and Harvard was put on an equal footing.

The unsatisfactory work of the Cambridge boat resulted in the scouring of a new shell, which was rushed through and got ready for use on the first of the month. It is not so wide as the Harvard boat, but is three feet longer.

Lately the Englishmen have been making up for lost time and seem to get along better with the new craft, and the two crews will go to the starting line about an even choice.

Naturally Harvard would be expected to have some accident happen on the long trip, and the most serious trouble came on August 16, when big Gordon Glass, who rowed three, received an injury to his knee and he was forced to spend his time paddling in a pair oared. While Glass was a powerful oarsman he lacked the finish, yet his loss will make considerable difference in the race.

TOSS OF COIN MAY DECIDE THE WINNER

PUTNEY, Sept. 8.—The toss of a coin may either lose or win the race for the Harvard crew. There are several seconds difference in the choice of positions and since 1845 when the first race between Oxford and Cambridge was rowed over the Putney to Mortlake course the stream has been regarded as perplexing and dangerous on account of the several narrow curves where the banks are not more than 130 feet apart. The average width of the course is 200 yards and the depth about twelve feet.

A narrow, crooked and fast lane is left for the oarsmen when the pistol is fired and unless one crew is greatly superior to the other or the crowds on the water side known the currents the shell to arrive at Hammersmith bridge, one and three-quarter miles from the start, is supposed to have the best chance of winning.

From 75,000 to 100,000 spectators may view the race. The banks on either side are picturesque, meadows and lawns ringing them.

Fifty yards above Five Span, Putney Bridge, is the start. Until the "short" is reached the crew hug the Middlesex shore. Then they shoot across to the Surrey side and the best helmsman gains a second or two. There are many points of interest along the course from here, which the oarsman don't notice, but which are interesting to the spectator including the Star and Garter, where the Oxford oarsmen have their headquarters.

HARVARD CREW BEST IN THIS COUNTRY

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—American rowing men, professional and amateur, are following closely the cables reporting the work of the Harvard crew in England, and everywhere praise of the improvement of the men is heard. Among those best qualified to judge of the merits of the crew none is accorded higher authority than Julian W. Curtis, advisory coach of Yale, a man who has closely followed amateur aquatics for many years.

Best in This Country.

"It is a fine, powerful crew which Harvard has sent to England," said Mr. Curtis. "I know what the crew is, for I followed its preliminary work and watched it during the race in which it defeated Yale. It can't be beaten this country. I do not think that Cornell is a better crew, in spite of the fact that it defeated Harvard. The Crimson does not get into its best fettle until the day of the race with Yale. The men were trained short when they met Cornell; I do not mean to reflect upon the Ithacans, but desire but to say that the crews would be upon even terms were they to race now.

"I consider Captain Filley an excellent leader, and he has seven good men with him, who will do all they can to pull out a victory. Then, Monagnan, the general adviser, is a thoroughly experienced director of athletic training, and he has almost in his power to keep the members of the crew in good form.

YALE COACH HOPES HARVARD WILL WIN

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 8.—"Harvard's chances are pretty nearly even for winning the boat race from Cambridge," said John A. Kennedy, the Yale coach, to-day. "Harvard has had to contend with many disadvantages, but her eight is a thoroughly representative American crew, and I look for it to make a first-class showing.

"I have personally somewhat regretted that the Harvard crew has been hitting its stroke up so high. I feel that the crew could get the best results out of its stroke kept at 33 or 34, but I do not know with what conditions the coaches have been confronted on the English Thames and what led them to decide to make the change.

English to Fight for Lead.

"It seems to me almost certain that the English eight will fight for the lead, and will get it and hold it for about two miles. In spite of all the Harvard efforts to come up abreast. I look upon it as practically certain that the Cambridge oarsmen will hold the lead for at least one mile. The real test of strength will come after the first two miles have been rowed. Harvard's condition and form will be seen at this time.

"The newspaper articles printed in advance of the race that is because of the Cambridge crew to some extent of the glory which will come to the crew that beats Harvard. They have not given the Harvard crew credit for all it will show on it really is. They have rated it as inferior to Cornell, while that is a matter about which there might still be some doubt. When Cornell and Harvard met in a preliminary race the Harvard crew was in crude condition. Its improvement after that event was wonderful, and when it met Yale it was on the American Thames had Cornell been substituted for Yale the outcome would have been decidedly in doubt.

Fast Cambridge Eight.

"The Cambridge eight is the fastest that has ever represented the English university. That is the opponent Harvard elected to draw, yet I cannot see that Cambridge is entitled to be set down in advance as the likely winner.

"It is unfair to Harvard to state, as has been done, that the question of the race was sprung on the Cambridge University crew in July, after the Cambridge college racing season was all over. Cambridge knew in April that Harvard would go her in case she defeated Yale, and Cambridge has prepared for the race and trained for it as she wished to do, in her own way. She has had four months' preparation for the event.

A couple of comments of the English critics appeal to me. One is to the effect which is in the water longer, the Cambridge or the Harvard oar. I have noted that the Harvard oar is. That is because of the longer Harvard slide, the greater power swing and the shorter leg drive make it necessarily so.

Comment on Harvard Style.

"The English critics comment on the fact that the Harvard catch does not seem to them to be so fierce as that of Cambridge. That is because of the fact that the Englishmen have shells rigged up with single pins, giving the oars two inches more leverage at the catch, while the Harvard shell in which the swivel is used for the oars. This gives the Harvard oar less catch, but at right angles the oars go back to the same leverage as before.

"It is not true that Yale planned to go to row Cambridge, and I do not think that there are any indications that Yale will take the trip.

"I hope that Harvard will win."

HOW RACE ON THE THAMES CAME ABOUT

The rowing world is awaiting the result of the international battle of oars to-day on the Thames, the great English water course, when Harvard crew and the crew of Cambridge meet in a four-mile test of aquatic skill and endurance, which will determine satisfactorily which produces the best material in the colleges of the two countries.

Should the Americans succeed in pushing the nose of their shell in front of the Cambridge boat at the finish line it will be one of the greatest triumphs in modern rowing annals and will be especially convincing that the methods followed on this side of the water in developing a crew are superior to those of the English system.

Yankee Spirit Shown.

It was sportsmanlike for the Americans to take the initiative and seek a match with the Englishmen and is only one example of Yankee spirit in stimulating athletic competition.

Much of the honor in bringing about the possibility of the two universities meeting on the line belongs to C. D. Filley, captain of the Harvard crew, and Rudolph C. Lehmann, M. P., the dean of intercollegiate rowing in England. It was Filley who cabled across requesting a race for next year, he knew the ground pretty well on account of his previous experience as a student at Oxford. Filley emphasized the fact very strongly that under the considerations would the match be a championship, as he realized that the conditions would not allow of such a race.

When Mr. Lehmann, who several years ago was at Harvard coaching the crew through invitation, received the message it was his first thought to do all in his power to bring it about, but he had much to contend with at first glance.

Thought Race Impossible.

It was on July 16 when he received the cable and he immediately showed it to F. L. Higginson, Jr., an old Harvard varsity captain who is living abroad. Both thought it a fine thing, but apparently impossible, as the Cambridge crew was scattered in all directions.

To have made it a bonafide championship the winner of the University Boat Club would have to be sought, and that organization is composed of thirty odd boat clubs. The consent of President Goldsmith of the club was obtained to have a race on strictly Harvard terms and Mr. Lehmann planned a dinner at which many old graduates were invited and then the race thoroughly discussed action was taken toward communication with the members of the Cambridge crew and a favorable reply was sent to Captain Filley.

The Crimson leader quickly took steps toward getting his men together, and they were not greatly surprised to learn of the trip, as he had told them if they won from Yale they would be should make at the contest on a race in England.

It was necessary to get the consent of the Harvard Athletic Committee, which was readily obtained, and preparations for securing the crew across were rapidly completed and the first start was made August 27.

Royal Send-Off for Crew.

It was a royal send-off the crew got when the steamer pulled out of New York harbor. In the party was Captain O. D. Filley, stroke; R. L. Bacon, No. 8; J. Richardson, No. 8; Gordon G. Glass, No. 4; R. M. Tappan, No. 3; Edward M. Blagden, No. 2, and Coach Jim Wray, and they had a fine voyage on the Celtic.

They disembarked at London on August 4, where they were met by Fish, No. 2; Newhall, No. 7, and Lunt, who rowed No. 6 on the freshman crew, but is not rowing regula. was Morgan, who had to remain behind. He was attending Summer school at Harvard, and he did not reach the headquarters of the Harvard crew till August 28. His place had been filled up to that time by Flint.

On August 8 the crew reached Bournes End, where they were to do their preliminary training before going to Putney to put on the final touches. The members of the crew had not rowed together since June 26 and they wasted no time in getting down to business.

Cambridge Crew Makeup.

The English crew was gotten together with all speed, and as early as August 12 the makeup was decided upon as follows, with their weights: Stuart, stroke, 150; Johnstone, No. 7, 173; R. Powell, No. 6, 169; Baynes, No. 5, 193; Donaldson, No. 4, 185; Goldsmith, No. 3, 169; Benham, No. 2, 165; Closesmith, bow, 149; Scott, coxswain, 125. This made the average of the Cambridge crew 169 pounds, against 169⅝ for Harvard, the biggest individual difference being between the two coxswains, Scott weighing twenty-one pounds more than Blagden.

It was August 11 when the Harvard boatmen went to Putney, the scene of today's battle, and began a heavy siege of hard work for the final encounter, and being nearer the English metropolis gave all excellent chance for the Britishers to size up the character of the visiting oarsmen. NO ICE CAUSES FOOD FAMINE

WINCHESTER, Sept. 8.—Unable to get sufficient ice to keep milk, cream and other commodities from spoiling, several prominent summer residents whose supply perishable goods, and if conditions continue may be obliged to close their places until cool weather.

A Stoneham ice company received the contract to supply ice to the Winchester stores, and during the warm weather is crowded.

The dealers sought the other companies doing business in town, expecting no difficulty in securing ice. But these companies have barely enough to supply their regular customers, and are unable to fill new customers, especially stores, more particularly at this time.

SEXTON DODGED BELL TONGUE AS IT FELL

WINSTED, Ct., Sept. 8.—Everett Barton, sexton of the Congregational Church in Kent, had a narrow escape from death last evening. While ringing the church bell he felt something give way and a sound above him caused him to step aside just as the old bell's iron tongue, weighing twenty-five pounds, clattered down where he had stood.

CITY LANDSLIDE FORECASTED FOR MORAN FORCES

That John B. Moran will carry substantially the entire city of Boston, obtaining all but a very few of the 230 delegates to the Democratic State convention, who disclosed by the opening of the nominating papers for the primaries at the headquarters of the Democratic City Committee.

In eight wards of the city the Moran delegation is without any opposition whatever. Those are Wards 1, 2, 7, 8, 10, 13, 18 and 23. In the other wards there are rival Moran delegations or Moran and unpledged delegations.

Leads in Committee Fight.

That Moran will have with him in his fight a large majority of the Boston delegates for the reorganization of the State Committee by a change in the personnel of the at-large members, is shown by the fact that the majority of the twenty-five wards of the city there are tickets pledged not only to "Moran," but to the "Moran organization."

That the Quincy-Gaston-Sullivan crowd will make a fight to prevent the reorganization of the state committee is indicated by the fact that in some wards where the old machine is strong they succeeded in having the Moran organization tickets stricken off the papers, although the delegates were signed for Gaston for Governor.

That the Quincy-Gaston crowd failed in getting Quincy Grand Master Edward Olney to mix in their fight is shown when the Ward 11 (Back Bay) delegation, Quincy himself leads the Moran delegation in this ward, the other names on the paper being John A. Sullivan, Thomas J. Garvan, former Police Commissioner Charles H. Cole, and former Alderman Harry Frothingham. Former Alderman William J. Donovan heads the first set of papers in this ward, which is pledged to John B. Moran.

Heads Unpledged Ticket.

In Ward 9, the home of former "Boss" James Donovan, and where Senator John J. Garrigan has been an enthusiastic Moran wheeler, the opening of the papers disclosed the surprising fact that the latter headed an unpledged delegation. A strong ticket headed by former Chairman of the Board of Aldermen David F. Harry, and with the name of former Alderman Patrick Bowen, the Fitzgerald leader in the ward, second on the list, is pledged to "John B. Moran and the Moran organunpledged delegation from Ward 21. Henry S. Fitzgerald, brother of the Mayor, heads a Moran delegation from Ward 22, while there is a second Moran ticket and a unpledged to the Moran organization, headed by Alfred P. Schiltaus, Handel J. Gove heads the Moran Ward 4 delegation.

In the congressional fights the only surprise was the failure of Joseph A. Conry to get on the Congressional ballot in the Ninth. This was due to his failure to obtain the signature of the Mayor, councilor Patrick J. Grady has a fight on his hands, being opposed by Edward Lodge Boyden in Ward 15. The hot Senatorial fight in the Fifth district will be somewhat complicated when the papers were opened, former Alderman Edward Lodge now being in the field, in addition to Senator Mellen and Thomas F. Cassidy.

Thomas F. Cassidy of Ward 17 is opposed for the Senate by former Alderman Patrick Bowen of Ward 9, while Daniel A. Kelley in the Third District will frame an easy time, having been indorsed by Edward W. Dixon of Ward 6. Alderman Frank J. Hurley of Ward 11, Patrick J. Shiels of Ward 14 and James F. Creed are out for the Senate in the Sixth District.

THREE DEAD, 12 HURT; TRAIN HITS TROLLEY

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—Owing to negligence by both the street and steam roads a rapid transit company street car, bringing fifty laborers from the Point Breeze citecks, was struck by a Pennsylvania railroad freight train, which backed down upon it. Two men and a boy, who jumped from the car platform, fell under the wheels of the freight train and were killed. Twelve others were injured. The electric power failed and the freight train was signalled to back up when the motorman was trying to start his car.

1 KILLED, 7 INJURED IN NEW EXPLOSIVE TEST

FARRONITE, DYNAMITE SUBSTITUTE, BLOWS UP LEDGE IN LYNN.

LYNN, Sept. 8.—A premature explosion of ten pounds of farronite, claimed to be three times as powerful as dynamite, during an experiment, killed the inventor, Frans W. Wurfemberger, a German chemist, fatally injured George Tatman, a prominent New York railroad man, and seriously hurt seven spectators at the quarry on Great Ledge, where the experiment took place yesterday.

People a half a mile away were struck by flying articles of stones and dirt. Houses in the immediate vicinity were bombarded with rocks and debris.

There were about forty people present to witness the experiment, and five holes had been drilled into the rock, each containing fifteen pounds of dynamite and in the fourth the charge of farronite was being tamped down when the explosion occurred, tearing a big hole in the rocks and hurling the inventor and his assistant high in the air.

This is the second explosion Inventor Wurtemberger has participated in. Last April he was badly hurt in New York and laid up in the hospital for some time.

Experts are at a loss to know what caused the detonation, but lay it to the unexplainable actions explosives sometimes take.

BONNIE SCOTS CELEBRATE AT WONDERLAND

Highlanders' Band Accompanied Merry Picnickers to Electric City by the Sea.

Yesterday was celebrated as "Scotch Day" at Wonderland, and from early afternoon until late in the evening the popular resort was crowded by a throng of sons and daughters of the hoonie land of the thistle and heather. The Scotch Highlanders' Band accompanied the picnickers, and in the evening gave a concert in the arena, the Salem Cadet Band being engaged in the carnival parade, which was the principal feature of Wonderland last evening.

At 8 o'clock the king and his court entered Wonderland and gave a half-hour reception on the throne dais in front of the administration building. The parade of the uniform rank followed and a grand ball was given in Wonderland's dancing pavilion afterwards. After opening the ball in right regal fashion King Reverens and his attendants marched to the "Fire and Flames" exhibit, proceeded by the Salem Cadet Band, and a reception to the court was held in the city square of the concession.

Reception at Fire Show.

The members of Wonderland's fire department and the 200 people employed in the enterprise were made welcome to the domain of Fairyland by His Majesty. The regular program followed and King Carnival, his jester and the court witnessed the novel performance from boxes which had been decorated in observance of the unusual event of a visit from royalty.

After the "Fire and Flames" exhibition the Majesty and suite completed a tour of the grounds, visiting the several attractions and returning to the throne room, where the court was held until the closing hour. The beautiful pageant will be repeated this afternoon and evening, and again on Sunday night next, when the electric fountain will be seen in full action.

Fred A. Bennett, the amusement director at Wonderland, is busily engaged upon arrangements for the Flower Festival, which will occur on Monday evening. Floats, colored designs for which arrived from New Orleans yesterday, are being prepared for the event, which promises to eclipse any other free exhibition that has been given at Wonderland, and the costumes for the participants in the "Floral Battle" have already arrived. Mr. Bennett feels confident that the floral show will be attended by at least 10,000 persons, and hundreds of dollars are being spent to make the spectacle a complete success.

Free American Tickets.

Sunday will be a gala day at Wonderland, and on Monday and Tuesday, when thousands will visit the popular resort as guests of the MONITOR AMERICAN, every effort will be exerted by the management to make the Labor Day carnival a celebration red letter days.

The carnival ceremonies will be repeated and the free arena exhibitions will doubtless attract great crowds. The Salem Cadet Band will be heard in the band concerts in both the afternoon and evening, and the Highlanders' Band will also improve popular features, and it is the intention to have a monster parade on the closing week of the carnival the greatest in point of attendance of visitors and general success.

WINS POSTCARD ELECTION BY 3

Alderman Charles Brown was from Alderman Henry Harding by three votes, 216 to 213, in the great postal card precinction for Representative nomination in the twenty-eighth Middlesex district from Ward 5, Medford, which closed last night.

The count was continued until the first morning mail yesterday, owing to a tie vote of 209.

The defeated man says: "I shall withdraw, as I agreed, and I pledge my hearty support to Mr. Brown.

Mr. Brown said: "We are out this year and a Democratic representative from Ward 5, and it looks as if we would."

AGED WOMEN FIGHT THIEF ON WINDOW LEDGE

Mrs. Mitchell, Age 80, Aided by Daughter, Drive Burglar from Their Home.

MEDFORD, Sept. 8. Mrs. Elizabeth Mitchell, an active old lady of eighty years, put a burglar out of her home at No. 70 Main street last night, and in a rather unusual struggle. Her aged daughter assisted in getting the intruder from the premises.

The two women grappled with the stranger and drove him to another room, where he was about to escape by a window. The two women ran to a window in another room facing close upon the one where the burglar was about to jump, and the daughter fought him as they stood in opposite windows.

The burglar fell through the glass to the ground a story below, and escaped, while the women shouted "police." Officers found the man's shoes and coat in the yard, and a general alarm was sent out in the city for the arrest of a man minus coat and shoes.

BOSTON GIRL FORSAKEN MAN

WILLING TO WED

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 8—So many women want to marry John J. Shuman of No. 1,106 Dickinson street since Miss Ella Stansbury, the pretty music teacher, jilted him, that he has refused to marry anybody by shooting the wedding ceremony Thursday, that Shuman is glad she did not appear for the ceremony.

"What's the use of crying over spilt milk?" Shuman said philosophically after he read a letter from a woman in Boston, who wrote that she was willing to supplant Miss Stansbury in his affection. "You bet, I am," said Miss Stansbury. "I believe Esmeralda, the fortune teller, selected that woman in Boston to be my wife. I am going to go to that Boston woman or have her here, and if we can agree on some points, then I am going to marry her."

CITIZENS ARE ROUSED---FOUR INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE BRANCHES STARTED IN ONE NIGHT

ENTHUSIASM IN WARDS 6 AND 9—NORTH ATTLEBORO AND QUINCY IN LINE.

With forty hustling, active members enrolled, Quincy's citizens last night met in Plumer's Hall, Quincy, and organized a branch of the Independence League of Massachusetts. Stirring speeches were made by several of the members and one by State President William N. Osgood of the league.

Great interest centered in the organization of a branch league in Quincy, which is considered a very important section of the State. After the adjournment the members elected temporary officers to act until the organization's membership is largely increased, when permanent officers will be installed. The officers elected last night were Frank Hibbett, president, and James E. Coffrey, secretary. Both are well-known labor men in Quincy, are young men, and ready to work for the interests of the league in their section.

"People Will Do Things."

State President Osgood, who was invited to attend the meeting and speak, talked of the aims and objects of the league and outlined what the men who enrolled themselves as members were expected to do toward the interests of the organization. He said: "This is not like an organization such as the Independent League of Massachusetts, calling attention to the existing conditions, but is political and financial, in this country.

"What will the league do when it is organized?" asked one of the members after Mr. Osgood had finished his speech.

"That is for the people—the members of the Independent League to say," replied Mr. Osgood. "I cannot foretell and you cannot foretell, and nobody else can foretell. It is up to the people—they are of the ones to be considered. They will do their own things."

Olin A. Holbrook, a well-known business man and real estate holder in both Norfolk Downs and Quincy and a resident of Atlantic, made a stirring speech on the good which the Independent League would do for the citizens of Massachusetts.

"All Should Join League."

"Every man with an independent thought in his State should at once join this league," said Mr. Holbrook. "This is our opportunity, and while I believe that the people of Massachusetts will take hold of this opportunity in the proper way, if by any chance they should not do so, wait till after the election in New York State in November and see what an impetus it will give to the Independent League in this State and every other State in the Union where such leagues are formed. But we don't want to wait, we want to be the ones to take the initiative. So, I say, become a member of the Independent League and work for its interests."

Levi Turner, another prominent citizen of Quincy, former candidate for the office of mayor of the city, spoke on public ownership of public utilities and the aims and objects of the Independent League. While the officers were being nominated for office Mr. Turner's name was mentioned, but he was forced to decline owing to the great amount of time necessary to look after his business interests.

League Organizes.

Harry Hinsdale, a well-known business man of the sixth ward, was chosen temporary chairman and was afterward elected permanent president of the league. Joseph A. DiPesa was elected permanent secretary.

President George Davis of the Ward 8 league was one of the speakers of the evening and his enthusiastic remarks regarding the principles and future of the league were received with applause. Secretary F. F. Davis of the State League was also present and talked on the aims of the organization and the work that is being accomplished in the State.

The next meeting will have to be held in a much larger hall if half the members come in who have already expressed their intention of doing so.

VOTERS OF NORTH ATTLEBORO OUT FOR INDEPENDENCE

Special to the Boston American.

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Sept. 8.—At an earnest and enthusiastic meeting of believers in political independence, held here last night, a branch of the Independence League of Massachusetts was formed. The following were elected officers:

President, John Devlin; vice-president, William A. Bartlett; secretary and treasurer, Henry Miner; chairman of the executive committee, Edward Crossley.

All the officers are well known business men in North Attleboro. Mr. Devlin, who was chosen president, has long enjoyed the confidence and respect of the citizens, having been honored by them in the past by many marks of their appreciation of his honesty and ability.

Another meeting will be held in the near future, when plans will be perfected for an aggressive participation in the State and town political campaigns. Among the visitors present from Boston of the league is Attorney George H. Davis.

NEWS OF LABOR.

Arrangements for the monster mass meeting of stationary engineers next Wednesday night at Faneuil Hall were completed at last night's meeting of Boston Stationary Engineers' Union No. 16. Some of the most prominent labor leaders of Boston and vicinity will speak. President W. B. F. Whalen will preside. Sixty applications for membership were received at last night's meeting as a result of the union's educational campaign.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mayor Fitzgerald for issuing instructions to the officials in charge of the city institutions, directing them to see that the provisions of the eight hour law are strictly complied with by them hereafter.

A farewell reception was tendered Frank H. Monaghan yesterday on his departure to Milwaukee to attend the six-day international convention of stationary engineers, which opens next Monday.

PAINTERS WIN VICTORY.

William F. McCarthy, international organizer of the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, returned to Boston yesterday and reported that 100 of the 106 painters who struck at Newburyport for the eight-hour day had returned to work, having won a victory. They represent sixteen out of the eighteen firms affected. Notification was given the employers last June that the men desired $2.50 a day for eight hours instead of nine.

Next week Mr. McCarthy will address painters' organizations in Lynn, Salem, Beverly, South Braintree, Marblehead and Gloucester. On September 12 he will form an organization in Nashua, N. H.

B. T. C. TO ELECT.

The grievance committee of the Building Trades Council rendered a vote of thanks to Bartenders' Union No. 77 last night for assistance rendered in unloading a job in Haymarket square. It was announced that officers of the Building Trades Council would be nominated and elected at to-morrow's meeting of the council.

The Labor Day committee made a profit of $2,000. All bills have been paid, it was stated.

WARD 15 ORGANIZES.

The Ward 15 Wage Earners' Club met last night at Carew Hall, No. 475 Broadway, South Boston, and organized with fifty-seven members. William Wiuts was elected temporary chairman and Michael Sullivan temporary secretary. The speakers were John T. Cashman and C. D. Shaw. Permanent officers will be elected next Monday night.

LEAGUE ROUSES VOTERS OF WARD 9

An enthusiastic meeting of the voters of Ward 9, South End, was held last night at Boyle O'Reilly Hall, Albany and Dover streets, when a branch of the Independence League of Massachusetts was formed. The older residents of the ward say that not in years has so much enthusiasm been shown in a movement as last night.

The meeting was called to order by Thomas Allen, the organizer of the league in this city. He told briefly of the effort that was being made not only in this city but throughout the State and the country to stop corruption, eliminate graft of all kinds and to induce voters to look for themselves and get out of the power of the bosses.

William L. Crossman was elected president, William Graham vice-president and James O'Brien secretary-treasurer of the temporary organization. They were made permanent officers later. In perfecting the permanent organization, Mr. Allen announced that the league would in no way conflict with the work of the Wage Earners' League, to which many in the hall belonged. He said that the two organizations would work together, for their aims were the same.

"By and for the People."

President Crossman said that he was opposed to rule by bosses and their rule. "I want a government of the people by the people and for the people," he said. "Switzerland has really more liberty than we have, for the people there vote direct for offices. The government owns the railroad's there. The agitation for municipal ownership of railroads has been in this country and we will get it yet, and not only the government ownership of railroads, but of telephones, telegraphs, water, gas and electricity as well. Because these things are not owned by the government the working man does not get his full earning."

Michael Drew of Ward 17, the Municipal Ownership League candidate to the Board of Aldermen last year, urged all to help the movement along, not only by their presence at meetings, but also by their work among their friends and neighbors.

"I can take you up to the lobby of the legislature, he said, "where I can show you the lobbyists for the corporations who are there to get the legislators, elected to represent the people, to work in the interest of the corporations and not that of the people. The municipal employes of Boston are under the thumb of them under the rule and dictation of the ward bosses. They are at their beck and call and must pay towards the support of the ward club, or else the bosses tell them they will not be protected if they get into trouble.

"People Will Unite."

"The platform for the Independence League, which was drawn up by the Champion of Democrats, William Randolph Hearst, is written along the lines expressed by Jackson and Jefferson.

Representative Teddy S. Glynn of Ward 17 said he believed in the efforts of the League and would work for it in office and out. He said that it was time that people made up their minds to unite and work against the corporations which have run the government for them.

Thomas Phalen of Roxbury was the last speaker. He said that Mr. Hearst had taken up the ship of Democracy and would guide it to the port of success. Masses of people are not subjected to the dictates of the bosses, he said. Mr. Phalen is calling "out now they plan an active movement which will bring to them absolute and true Democracy for the city of Boston and the State."

ENTHUSIASTIC FOR LEAGUE IN WARD 6

Citizens of Ward 6 loudly applauded the sentiments expressed by the speakers at a meeting called in the hall at No. 28 Cross street, last night, and wound up by organizing an Independence League, which starts with upwards of fifty members. More than two-thirds of those present signed the membership rolls, and every member expressed his earnest intention of securing at least five additional members before the next meeting.

Nathan S. Sockelson, who had the hall in an uproar of applause during a brilliant speech, expressed the sentiment of the assembled voters when he said:

"This Independence League offers to us common people the opportunity we have been seeking for honesty in politics. You have all to see the Boston Elevated Railroad carrying people for three cents instead of five cents. You will see the gas trust stopped from fattening on the people by means of its watered stock and its owned legislators at the State House. Do you expect you are going to do it with William A. Gaston's Democracy or the Gas Trust's Democracy? If you do you are mistaken.

"Honest men have tried to secure control of the machinery of the great parties to run them honestly and have failed. The principles of the Democratic party have read pretty well—on paper—but what happens when Hearst, or Folk, or other honest men try to secure control of the party? You know the answer. The big thieves, the grafting corporations, who use their leaders happen to call themselves Republicans or Democrats, bind together to keep them from doing it. The old saying, 'Birds of a feather flock together' is as true of crooked trust magnates as it is of any other class of criminals.

"This is the era of organization. The workingmen are organized. The grafters are organized. The stealing trusts are especially organized. It is time we common people got organized to see that we are represented by people who will be our friends at some other time than the day before election. And this league is your great opportunity to organize. Sign and work and want to see them in office, don't you. We don't want you and we don't have them. But if you are willing to stand firm for independence, even as Patrick Henry and Benjamin Franklin and John Hancock and Thomas Jefferson stood for independence from England, we invite you to join and help the league's work."

4 FUNNY POSTAL CARDS FREE —WITH— TO-MORROW'S SUNDAY AMERICAN

Here's a letter which one Boston American reading boy has just written another. It shows how the young folks like the Magic Post Cards that are given away with to-morrow's Sunday American:

Boston, Mass., Sept. 6, 1906.

Dear Tom—I couldn't get up to see you this week. So I just write. I am sorry that school soon begins, but we can't help it so we will have to have more fun in a shorter time. You ought to get the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN. Oh, I don't read the whole paper—father does that. What I dive for is the Comic Section and those dandy Magic Post Cards.

The last time you were down I showed you some I had fixed up. You must get your father to buy the paper so you can get the cards, too, and then we'll see who can bring the hidden pictures out best, you or I.

We have big times in our house guessing what is on the cards. Father makes a guess (if he's not too busy), mother guesses, so does Mary, and then I do. Then I hold the cards over the stove or gas and watch the pictures come out. I can hardly wait until Sundays come. It's awful big fun. Sometimes we guess right. I did the other day when the card wanted to know what Leander was mad about in the theatre.

My father knows the editor of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN. He was at our house yesterday and said that next Sunday's Magic Post Cards were going to be the funniest that they ever got out yet. I can't wait hardly till Sunday comes. I hope you'll get your father to buy the paper for you. He will be glad to read it anyway, for my father says (and he knows) that the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN has every other Boston Sunday paper beat a mile.

Next Sunday they are going to have Leander; Hans and Fritz Katzenjammer, Foxy Grandpa and another, I think, is about Maud. I wish I knew for sure if it was about Maud. The editor said that Leander was being scared to death about something. I wonder if Lulu's father is running away with her.

I can't think what Foxy Grandpa's last joke is about. They say he is hiding behind a barrel and he's got a kind of scarecrow or tramp in the barrel. I wonder if he has scared the boys again. 'Spose you guess, too, when you get the cards. Write down your guesses and I'll write down mine and then we'll look at them afterwards when you come here. Bring your guesses along.

The Katzenjammer Kids are going to get the worst scare they ever had, the Sunday paper man says. I wonder what it is this time? Isn't it funny? Those Katzenjammer Kids are nearly as old as I am and they're funnier to-day than they ever were.

I wish I knew about that other picture—whether Maud was in it or not. I think she must be tho', for what would the Magic Post Cards be without Maud? The editor told me that all he could see was an end of a house, an open window, a woman in the kitchen and two pies falling off the window sill. Then he said there was a man running and that he looked like Si.

These Magic Cards are awful good. We have great times making the pictures come out. At first father tried and he burned them almost all up. He gave up. Mother wouldn't try and she was afraid to let Mary do it for she might catch fire. Then I did it. I burned some and scorched (is that spelt right?) others, but at last I got on to it and can do pretty well now.

Every Sunday morning I get at the cards after breakfast is over. It's hard to wait until nearly 10 o'clock, but I often have to. Come up as soon as you can, Tom, and we'll have some fun. EDDIE.

It's practically the local windup of the American League at the Huntington avenue grounds to-day, as the team leaves to-morrow to be gone till Oct. 5.

The Senators have the honor of being the attraction in the farewell appearance, and the two clubs are now trying to decide which will end at the foot of the ladder. The boys from the capitol have some advantage, but are likely to be overhauled ere the end of the season.

To-day's result will pretty well size up the situation in the relative merits when C. Stahl and J. Stahl lead the charges for their respective camps.

The b. c. clash was in favor of C. Stahl, whose wa. worn put in his namesake in great style, and chalked up a win at figures of 4 to 0.

The Patten which J. Stahl presented was just the fi. e the local batters, and they knuckled onto his offering with the same fervor they do to the little bunch of greens on pay day.

It was not quite the same Patten who has in the past tied the fifth batterie into knots as they got to him before it was too late and made up for some lifting loses earlier in the season. He sailed along serenely for most of the way, and just as he thought it would be a cake-walk something dropped and the bingles hummed around his ears.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—Boston and Philadelphia will meet in their fourth and last game to-day. The Quakers have won two and lost one, and feel confident that they will easily win the final battle.

Tals is practically the last game of the season for the Tenneyites away from home. Monday they open up the Huh and play there until October 5 and 6, when they jump over to New York and close the season with the Giants.

"Little Cy" Young, who hasn't been himself of late as regards pitching, will be on the firing line for the Bostons to-day, according to statements made by manager Fred Tenney. Lush, the crack twirler of the locals, will probably oppose him.

LANGDON DREW WITH BEZENAH

DAYTON, O., Sept. 8.—Jack Langdon, of Philadelphia, and Gus Bezenah, of Cincinnati, fought twenty rounds to a draw. Bezenah rushed his man in the first few rounds, but Jack blocked him so cleverly that Bezenah changed his methods. Jack knocked Bezenah down in the second round, and Bezenah drew first blood in the same round. The men clinched nearly every time blows were struck.

Expert Naughton Calls the Goldfield Fight Tame

GANS WEAKENED BY TRAINING

BY W. W. NAUGHTON.

GOLDFIELD, Nev., Sept. 8.—Goldfield has found a place on the map of sportdom. Guns has become popular, Nelson has lost prestige, and the best advertised championship of ten years is as a tale that is told.

Was it a good fight? is the first question asked of every pilgrim from the goldstream, waterless region.

It was not.

There was plenty of fighting spirit shown, but the work done was of a patchy character. The chances are that each man would have done better if he had had a few pounds more of flesh on his frame. This thing of a pugilist passing a certain notch, knowing it will weaken him to make it, maybe figuring that it will weaken the other fellow a great deal more, should be ground down, and the man who offers cause should have something to say in regard to weight conditions.

Only when all champions and would-be champions bow to rational lines, and the public get fair value for the money it pays for ring entertainment.

Time for a couple of weeks had been telling how easily he made 133, and he promised to give Nelson as good a fight as he gave Mike (Twin) Sullivan.

Why, if Guns last Monday had had the strength and the dash he displayed four years ago he'd put the whole thing away would have been over in four rounds.

With Sullivan, Gans had to feuce, parry his subject before cutting loose. In the Nelson affair it was not necessary for the negro to make a feint at any stage of the game. All he had to do was to lash out with a glove and Nelson's face was there. What was lacking was knockout force, and it wasn't lacking in the bout with Sullivan.

Nelson Easy to Hit.

It may be urged that Nelson is harder to hurt than Sullivan. For the sake of argument granted, but isn't he easier to hit, and doesn't constant dropping wear away a stone? It is safe to say that Gans landed three blows on Nelson for every one he landed on Sullivan. The reason he knocked out Sullivan and failed to knock out Nelson was because he was heavier and huskier when he met the Irishman there, we loved the Dane.

As for Nelson, he did not have half the ring—and it is no go with Britt. While his ring manners were of the worst, everyone remembers how he stopped and lifted Britt after the knockout blow and acted throughout the fight like a battler who possessed chivalry.

That is always associated with true courage. Had it been his luck to put Gans to the floor up in the cage brush country I believe he would have jumped on the negro with both feet.

In favor of throwing water on a drowned rat to be reverting to Nelson's fine traits when so many critics are taking a fling at him.

But I desire to show that it was low condition, possibly, that soured the Dane and made him pouty. In the Britt contest he finished as fresh as he began, while in the bout with Gans he was a bedraggled looking Norseman before many seconds had passed. His ribs showed through his hide, and there was sullenness and no animation in his look when he sat in his corner before the contest began.

The watches ticked off forty-two rounds, as everyone knows, but the fighting that took place might have been compressed into a dozen three-minute spells without overcrowding them with action, and one of the main reasons for this was that the fighters had very little ginger left after their drastic preparations in the desert climate.

Loafed or Spurted.

Gans began to slow up very early in the game, his vim appearing to lose its edge after four round of brisk boxing, during which he simply toyed with the man before him. After that the colored lightweight loafed or spurted, just as the humor took him, sometimes holding himself in reserve for two-thirds of a round, and then starting a rally that lasted till the bell time.

The attendance was remarkably patient considering that so many of the rounds were made up of two parts wrestling and one part fighting. If an exhibition of that fighting had put up before a San Francisco gallery is is highly probable that a number of new expressions signifying intense disgust would be coined.

In every second of fair stand-up fighting that occurred Gans had all the best of his opponent and the fact that the negro did not court more of that kind of thing confirms my suspicion that his strength had been affected by weight making.

Joe showed, too, that he was not absolutely necessary for him to grapple and hold on to defend himself. His ducking, and masterly ducking it was, lent some variety to the show.

But in the main he contented himself with leaning shoulder to shoulder with the Dane and shuffling around monotonously for fashion, nor did Nelson prove himself to be a human hoss saw.

4TH RACE IN ROOSEVELT CUP SERIES TO-DAY

MARBLEHEAD, Sept. 8. — To-day's race, the fourth in the series for the Roosevelt Cup, is a twelve-mile leeward and windward affair, with turning marks three miles from the start and yachts going twice over the course. Light winds prevail for the contest.

Yesterday was a day of rest. The crews of the German sonder boats were taken across to the Beverly shore last night for dinner at the German Embassy.

The boats were hauled out and their underbodies gone over with sandpaper and varnished yesterday. The Vim, winner of the last two races, and the favorite for the cup, was found in excellent shape and needed very little attention.

TOMMY MURPHY WHIPS DWYER

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8.—Tommy Murphy of Harlem outpointed Johnny Dwyer of Port Hamber in one of the fastest wind-ups ever pulled off in this city at the National Athletic Club. Dwyer had the speed, but Murphy had the punch, and the punch won out. In the fourth round Murphy landed a full off-handed swing on Dwyer's body and Dwyer went down for the full count, but managed to regain his pin and stick it out.

NONE LEFT TO MEET JEFFRIES OR GANS

BY TAD.

It looks as though the fighters themselves were killing the fighting game quicker than the law is.

About three years ago we had a flock of heavyweights who were clamoring for the title. They were accommodated one by one by a gentleman of the name of Jeffries. He even went back and gave them another chance, and after cleaning them quicker than beating he retired to a farm in Southern California.

Since that time we have not had a heavyweight champion worth a dime on the box. We have a lot of "bull" merchants who trim a few poor old tramps, go on the road, pull a lot of stuff about being a conqueror and then fade.

There has not been a good, ripe man in the big division since Jeff left, and from the looks of the crop now it will be quite awhile before one does show up.

There is another gentleman named Gans, who was formerly employed peddling oysters in Baltimore. He has been peddling lefts and rights for about fifteen years, gradually killing off a certain class of mitt sling ers known as lightweights. In the last two years this man Gans has wiped the map clean.

There was a rough-house guy by the name of Nelson who took all the white trays and soused them good and plenty. He thought he might beat this chocolate around eight or ten times, but he changed his mind when he found that Gans was not to be stalled off.

The mass who peeled the oysters almost perfect him alive, and they say that Nelson is the only man of Nelson heat to remain in the bay three days before he was able to peek with his troupe.

Soon was the last of the good lightweights. Kilbane was not neither have a good lightweight now, except Gans, and of course the two demons who have trimmed the ring.

O'BRIEN SIGNS TO FIGHT BERGER

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—Philadelphia Jack O'Brien and Sam Berger signed articles to-day in the Examiner office for another contest and styling it "for the heavy-weight championship of the world." Jack O'Brien went through Chicago to-night on his way to Australia and took a few minutes of the short time he had in the city to meet Jack Gleason, manager of Berger, and sign up for a return contest.

The articles were drawn up and signed in less than a half hour conference and there was little argument over the points signed. O'Brien insisted that there be no hitting in the clinches.

"I am giving him forty pounds in eight," said O'Brien, "and I do not want him wrestling me around the ring and holding on."

When the signatures were affixed Jack rushed away to catch a train for New Mexico. He has some business to attend to there, and then will go to San Francisco and sail on the steamer Sierra for Sydney, arriving there October 5. From there he will go to Melbourne, where he fights Bill Squires on November 6 for a purse of $15,000. He will be back in this country by December 1, and will be ready to fight Sam Berger within the month.

NEW TROUBLE FOR MOTORISTS

BY J. C. KERRISON.

A new system of torture was recently tried by the police of a certain town not far removed from Boston. These officers have in the past been charged with arresting motorists on the mere suspicion of violating the speed law. In order to make the punishment more fitting to the crime, the idea was evolved of charging the offenders with reckless driving. This is considered as one of the worst possible crimes, and a reckless driver is frowned upon by his fellows of the motor. In all cases where a man is convicted of reckless driving the Highway Commission has to revoke his license. So when other men were arrested and charged with reckless driving by the police of a certain historic town, the offenders, realizing the difficulties that beset their path, immediately fought the charge, hoss, foot and dragon. They might have pleaded guilty to a charge of violating the speed law, but only a one of them would admit recklessness, and strange though it may seem, each and every one of them won out, and the officers of that town have been back to the old game of arresting for violation of the speed law.

The law of the State, or to be more precise in a local Boston court, a man was recently charged with reckless driving, and proven guilty. How flagrant a violator of that clause in the present automobile law the victim had been is shown by the fact that the presiding justice considered the imposing of a fine of $5 great enough to cover the violation. Still when the record of the case came before the Highway Commission it had according to law revoke to the license of the operator, and it was revoked.

At last there seems to be some desire to straighten out the conditions under which the contests for the Glidden trophy shall hereafter be held. The original intent was that the cup should be for competition between amateur owners, who should either drive or ride in their own machines. How well that intent was carried out is shown by the fact that in the first of the contests there were not over ten bona fide amateurs or owners. The trophy was won by Percy Pierce, who is connected with the industry precisely him under the rules of the A. A. A. from being considered as an amateur, statements to the contrary notwithstanding. Then in the second tour there were thirteen persons tied for honors, and over two of that number could be considered amateur tourists, the remainder all being connected in some way or other with the industry.

Mr. Glidden, the donor of the trophy, is to confer with the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers at its October meeting, with a desire to evolve some satisfactory rules to govern the tour a year hence. The best and most business like thing to do would be to evolve a contest out of the tour, to be honest and plain about the matter, and admit that it is a contest in name as well as in fact, for contest it surely has been since its very inception. Then those who cry and complain about this, that, and the other will have only themselves to blame for ever getting caught in dust.

ARGOT BOY WON 2:09 PACE.

HARTFORD, Ct., Sept. 8.—In the windup of the Grand Circuit meet at Charter Oak Park there were but two races, neither of which was spirited. The favorites in both events were beaten. My Star losing in three straight heats to Argot Boy in the 2:09 pace, and Dr. Chase, the favorite in the pools for the 2:17 trot, finishing third to Iadia and Jessie Benyon.

JOHN MOONEY TO MANAGE MATTY BALDWIN

Matty Baldwin, the clever and promising featherweight from Charles own, has secured John Mooney to manage his interests in the future and the combination should bring some great results for Matty, as Mooney will push him along for the featherweight championship.

Both have numerous admirers in the Bunker Hill district who are glad that the pair has hitched, as it means the making of the staunch little battler, who has never suffered a knockout in the ring, and he has met the best in his class. He is the best boy at his weight in the East, and he will seek to get Terry McGovern and Tommy Murphy in the ring at the Lid early A. C. shortly, and then go to the Western country in quest of bigger until ee.

Mooney succeeded in bringing Honey Mellody to the front, and it was because the latter broke away from his manager that he was defeated recently up Tu ton.

WHICH CARRIES THE GREATER SHARE OF LIFE'S BURDENS, HUSBAND OR WIFE?

Which Bears More of the Hardships? Which Makes More Sacrifices?

BY DOROTHY DIX

Up to then she has never done anything exactly as she wanted to. She has always had to defer to her mother and father, and grandfather, and sisters, and cousins and aunts.

She's worn what they thought proper and she hated, and she has eaten according to her mother's dictation and not her own taste. But the wedding ends all that.

Shhh-shh-shh, ladies! Don't all speak at once. A deaf man could hear you. I know you have to stay at home and keep house while your husband is off at his store or office. It is true you have to take care of the children, and that you were up three times last night with Johnny, while your liege lord slumbered and slept like an Insensate brute.

As a broad proposition a woman has everything to gain financially by marrying and nothing to lose.

This is even true legally, for in many States a woman's property is her own, while her husband is responsible for her debts.

With a man matrimony means the heavy end of the bargain.

He begins by dividing his income in half with another person, and generally ends by cutting it into infinitesimal pieces with a family.

If he is in moderate circumstances as soon as he is married he must work harder, be more economical and deny himself the luxuries that he was used to as a bachelor.

Wife Is Boss

He also cripples his opportunities for getting on. He cannot save up a nest egg as fast with more mouths to feed, and more backs to clothe. He cannot take risks that he could if he had no one but himself to consider, and he cannot accept openings for better situations, in places where his wife is not willing to go.

This makes matrimony much harder on him than on her. He pays the higher price for it.

To one who gets the most dividends out of the partnership I look at her and I look at him. He is almost invariably the worst dressed member of the household. He has the fewest entertainments.

He denies himself the indulgence of his personal tastes the oftenest. Out of the daily slavery he undergoes in business the ordinary benedict gets merely his board and clothes and the privilege of seeing his wife sail by in silk attire with money in her purse to waste.

Matrimony also emancipates a woman, but it lands a man in the chain gang. The wedding is the beginning of the bride's liberty, and the end of the bridegroom's.

Which one asks whom she listeth to come and make visits, and which would object to bring home an unexpected friend to dinner?

There is also a tradition that woman is the chief economist in the family, and that she saves the pennies and lets the dollars take care of themselves, while man is a spendthrift who throws away his money on cigars and clubs and other foolishness.

She leaves the altar, not only a free woman, but BOSS, and henceforth her husband eats and drinks and smokes according to her behest, and not to his own stomach and appetite.

He may have the digestion of an ostrich, but there's no more Welsh rarebits for him unless they agree with her.

Nor is there any alcoholic sustenance if she happens not to be a thirsty soul.

Poor Old Hubby

It will be found that the one who really does the giving up for peace in a family is almost always the man. How many poor, henpecked husbands we all know, who lie for the sake of harmony about where they spent a couple of unaccounted-for hours and who would sooner wave a red rag in the face of an infuriated bull than mention poker in their wives' presence.

Yet these men never attempt to coerce or reform their wives. Habits and ways into their ways. They would not dream of abridging a lady's liberty in the dress chosen or the gown, or interfere with her amusement of lying on a sofa and munching chocolate creams and reading Laura Jean Libbey.

As for the home, who gets the most good of it? Aren't most men merely allowed in the establishment their women-folks are pleased to make comfortable?

Whose family are perpetually installed in the spare room, the husband's or the wife's? Which one has one's whole closets and which a mere nail for clothes?

"I'm not mistaken. Ever since I saw you I have been lying about it to myself. I've had one face in my mind—the face of the man who went into the magic hall with my waiter last night! And I see now that you were frightened when I recognized me. You were going to get away before I saw your face! Deny it if you will; I know you are the man, I know it!"

Close to Madness

Haggard did not answer.

What was there to say? Nothing could shake Lee's conviction in words, no denials. It was unassailable. The game was up.

He had thought he might count on at least a week in which to make preparations for flight. A week—had he even one clear day? The game was up, the net tightening round him. This woman who had loved Grieve would go instantly to the police and denounce him. Once their suspicions were aroused, proof would be forthcoming.

One clear day for flight? Rather could he be sure of even a few clear hours?

An intense fear took Haggard. Through his grim, as he saw the net suddenly tightening around him. Visible little shapes of danger rose utterly unexpected blows had fallen; through Olga Vall his guilt had been made clear to the police, and Lee, on who stood before him, with her accusing eyes, like a personification of his deeds, would denounce him to the police.

In a moment of blind, unreasoning fear Philip Haggard realized desperately that unless he could fly at once there was an inevitable end waiting for him; he would be lost.

He saw himself standing facing that stern figure clad in the robes of office, who would pronounce sentence. He could almost hear the pitiless words, as though they were echoing through the room:

"The sentence of the court is that you shall be taken back to the place whence you came and there——"

A wild, strangled cry broke from Philip Haggard. He made a sudden blind, threatening movement forward, as though, desperate, he would silence his chief accuser—this woman whose evidence would weave a rope about his neck, terror driving him to the very border line beyond which madness crouches.

A Mental Overload

Philip Haggard looked about him, with the sweat on his brow. The agony of fear was sponged from his mind; he found himself staring at the girl dully, wondering why she did not go. She was wasting his time when he wanted every moment and had preparations to make for flight.

"But why was he flying, and where? There seemed to be a catch in his thoughts, clogging them; it saddened grieved at the grievous befalling of the championship of the dead man who had been so like a brother to her championship.

She ignored his words. She spoke again, this time in a low, intense voice.

"I forgot what we were talking about, indeed, whom I have the pleasure of addressing."

"My memory never played me such a trick before. I am afraid I shall have to ask you to excuse me."

He wished this woman would go: he did not want to be rude, of course, but he had a dim, fixed idea that he was going to escape by night by train; some arrangement he had made, no doubt; and until this shifter went he could not get on with his packing.

He felt now that he could not for the life of him remember for the moment who she was, but of course he would be all right in a minute or two; he must have been overtaxing his brain.

Then Philip Haggard became aware that the visitor was looking at him in a strange, startled way, and was shrinking back, staring cautiously towards the door, never taking her eyes off him.

Was She Mad?

Then with a little gasping cry she darted through the door, shutting it quickly after her.

Haggard stared after her with vacant eyes. Was the woman mad?

But how intensely grotesque she had looked, creeping to the door in that extraordinary way, almost as though she was afraid of him! He threw his head back and laughed. At least, if it was a mad woman whom West had admitted, she had amused him, and that was something.

Now, he supposed, he must hurry on with his packing; the feeling was insistent in his mind, though he really did not know what he had to pack for. He felt a certain vague alarm at this freak of memory; he must see his medical man about it.

"I'll ask West," Haggard thought, touching the electric bell, "I'll ask him what would know if he had said that he was going away."

The door opened and the man servant appeared.

"West," began Haggard, "can you——" He stopped abruptly. The feeling of memory had come surging back on him, with all the horror of it.

The sight of the man had in an instant recalled to his mind West's former entrance with the lighted lamp, and the girl's accusing cry as she saw his face in the yellow glare. Memory and fear seemed to hit him after the pause of that brief lesion of mind. The girl's shrill accusing cry rang in his ears, who even now was on her way to denounce him!

"Has that woman left the house, sir?" he asked quickly.

"Oh, yes, sir."

"Did she notice anything odd about her?" Haggard demanded. He was anxious to learn if the woman had dropped any hint of her visit to West.

"She went out rather curiously, sir. I was just going to announce her when I saw her and slip out of the door. I must confess, sir, I did think her manner rather strange," said West, stolidly.

"I think she was some mad person," said Haggard, wondering feverishly if West suspected anything. "Thank you, West; that was all I wanted you for."

The man withdrew. For quite a minute after West had closed the door Haggard stood motionless, trying to think. Without warning he had been brought face to face with the supreme crisis of his fate. A deadly fear was on him—a double fear.

Must Keep Calm

That short-lived lesion of mind had been Nature's danger signal that he was on the verge of collapse; that unless he could control his wildly-excited nerves, refuse to yield to that clamoring panic of fear, his reason might break down utterly.

He must keep calm—knowing that the woman had gone to inform the police! Half a dozen of several of the "bad" men under the Arabesque with the man who was dead. Even if the police did not arrest him at first upon this woman's evidence, they would keep him under surveillance; flight would be impossible then. He must fly to-night.

Money? He had very little ready money. Two hundred dollars at most, and he had the bitterness of knowing that with only a week's respite he could have got together something like two hundred thousand. But better fly, even though a beggar, than remain—to be sentenced to death.

At least he had that diamond necklace in his safe in the library; the necklace which he had given Olga Vall to wear on that night when the police made inquiries at his house.

Only a little heap of stones now, for the thin gold thread on which the diamonds were strung had been broken as, in anger at his intended betrayal of her, Olga had torn off the necklace and flung it at his feet. The diamonds would fetch at least $5,000.

He moved to the safe and unlocked it. The thing that first met his eye seemed to confront him. It was the bag taken from Olga Vall's wrists were still lying there; he had never known how to dispose of them.

The sight of them sent a little shiver through him; he touched the steel with his fingers with a shrinking as if it called at his touch and moved. Unless he could make good his flight to-night, such letters as these would be placed in his private safe.

He secured the diamonds, put them carefully into an inner pocket, and went to his bedroom in a fever of haste and dragged out a suit case, and then paused as if in such things as he would need for his journey and he set about it. He would go to New York. There was a boat daily to Halifax. He would leave the country before the police knew he had bolted. The game was up.

Nerves All Gone

In the midst of his work he paused; there was a knock at the door and listened; was that a knock? But even if it were, it could not be the police, he argued with his fears; the woman could not possibly have come from interview with the police yet. That inevitable delay gave him a little time, and if he only kept cool he might yet escape.

"Haggard, control your head, man, don't lose your head!" he whispered to himself again and again, trying to fight back those cravings for fear.

He was cramming the suit case with things, the mind of the desperate, unnerved man was so absorbed by terror that he was working mechanically without realizing what he was doing, he thrust the first things to hand into the bag: old boots, old socks, a medley of useless things.

He paused to look feverishly at his watch; there would be no train for an hour, but an hour he must leave in this place—leave all this luxury with which he had surrounded himself forever. But he would be on his way to safety.

Had he packed anything? Was there anything he had forgotten? He could not remember; his mind, charged with fear, seemed incapable of concentrating itself on details.

He strapped the case up quickly; he must get out of the house without West knowing. West's suspicions might already have been aroused. He must leave the house quietly, carrying the bag to the station himself. He was in that overwrought state when he mistrusted every one, read suspicion in every glance.

To be stopped at the last moment would be fatal.

As he locked the case, Philip Haggard's eyes were attracted by a curiously-shaped key on his bunch. The key of the tower! It seemed to whisper a sudden insidious insinuation.

"No, no!" muttered Haggard, recoiling from the thought.

How to Be a Hostess That All Will Envy

The art of being a successful hostess comprises in itself a variety of gifts; a good memory, presence of mind, calmness, tact and kindliness; a flurried hostess is of all, perhaps, the most futile, a careless one almost the most irritating.

Memory in a hostess is a necessity, for it is the most commonplace politeness that she should remember her guests' faces and not, at an at-home, for instance, greet any of them with the vaguely puzzled look that one sometimes sees on a hostess's face.

Presence of mind is almost the most important of all qualifications for the successful entertainer. She must possess her soul, her cool, calm and collected, not to lurk in scraps of conversation, looking all the while over her guest's head at the next one.

Tact and kindliness should go hand in hand; young people, no doubt, like to make acquaintances, but for a young man to to be pushed, as it were, into the arms of a young girl and told to take her to dance or partake of refreshments is highly embarrassing to both, but one has seen similar tactics adopted by a tactless hostess.

Men, especially the shyer members, have a knack of drifting together at functions, and a hostess does well to disperse them, giving them to understand that she, personally, hopes they will look after her guests.

Dances are, perhaps, the occasions where a kindly hostess can do most for her friends, and what a difference she can make to the younger members of the gathering! Dancing, with a big X, no doubt every one is supposed to know everyone else, but how few there are present this day by any means always the case, and as presumably the giver of a ball intends her friends to enjoy it, she should see to it that young girls do not spend the entire evening against a wall.

Somewhere, perhaps, is the innate selfishness, or the reverse, of a girl more conspicuously displayed than at a dance; at certain houses the dancing men and maids will themselves dance the entire evening, while other girls, perhaps younger and prettier, but knowing hardly anyone, will sit dejectedly neglected till supper time.

Other girls, on the contrary, will not be at ease unless they see everyone of their mother's guests provided with partners, and even at other people's houses will do their best to give their girl friends as good a time as possible.

Conversation is a gift that comprises a great deal in the art of hostessing, and a hostess should be well read in the topics of the day, and should be able to converse with a certain amount of ease on any subject that may be started by her guests.

Above all things, a hostess should be tactful, and should not, for instance, when she sees a guest is ill at ease, leave him or her severely alone, but should endeavor to put the shy one at his or her ease.

Tact and kindliness should go hand in hand; young people, no doubt, like to make acquaintances, but for a young man to to be pushed, as it were, into the arms of a young girl and told to take her to dance or partake of refreshments is highly embarrassing to both, but one has seen similar tactics adopted by a tactless hostess.

"SHADOWS OF NEW YORK"

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner

Haggard gave another start, and stopped suddenly in the midst of it, his own laugh sounded so strange and weird, and he could not think what was the best thing to do! But he could not control his thoughts; fear drove them in a stampede through his mind, beyond his power of mustering them.

Her accusing eyes were bent on his face, this little girl whom he had played with, petted, and for whom he was afraid of her power; there was suddenly an unsuspected force in character behind her childish championship of the dead man who had been so like a brother to her championship.

She ignored his words. She spoke again, this time in a low, intense voice.

"I'm not mistaken. Ever since I saw you I have been lying about it to myself. I've had one face in my mind—the face of the man who went into the magic hall with my waiter last night! A Mental Overload

Philip Haggard looked about him, with the sweat on his brow. The agony of fear was sponged from his mind; he found himself staring at the girl dully, wondering why she did not go. She was wasting his time when he wanted every moment and had preparations to make for flight.

"But why was he flying, and where? There seemed to be a catch in his thoughts, clogging them; it saddened grieved at the grievous befalling of the championship of the dead man who had been so like a brother to her championship.

She ignored his words. She spoke again, this time in a low, intense voice.

"I'm not mistaken. Ever since I saw you I have been lying about it to myself. I've had one face in my mind—the face of the man who went into the magic hall with my waiter last night! And I see now that you were frightened when you recognized me. You were going to get away before I saw your face! Deny it if you will; I know you are the man, I know it!"

Close to Madness

Haggard did not answer.

What was there to say? Nothing could shake Lee's conviction in words, no denials. It was unassailable. The game was up.

He had thought he might count on at least a week in which to make preparations for flight. A week—had he even one clear day? The game was up, the net tightening round him. This woman who had loved Grieve would go instantly to the police and denounce him. Once their suspicions were aroused, proof would be forthcoming.

One clear day for flight? Rather could he be sure of even a few clear hours?

An intense fear took Haggard. Through his grim, as he saw the net suddenly tightening around him. Visible little shapes of danger rose utterly unexpected blows had fallen; through Olga Vall his guilt had been made clear to the police, and Lee, on who stood before him, with her accusing eyes, like a personification of his deeds, would denounce him to the police.

In a moment of blind, unreasoning fear Philip Haggard realized desperately that unless he could fly at once there was an inevitable end waiting for him; he would be lost.

He saw himself standing facing that stern figure clad in the robes of office, who would pronounce sentence. He could almost hear the pitiless words, as though they were echoing through the room:

"The sentence of the court is that you shall be taken back to the place whence you came and there——"

A wild, strangled cry broke from Philip Haggard. He made a sudden blind, threatening movement forward, as though, desperate, he would silence his chief accuser—this woman whose, evidence would weave a

How Did You Meet Your Sweetheart?

Try for a Prize

CONTESTANTS in the postal card competition are doing finely, both with their little love stories and their sketches. Some writers, however, seem to think "jokes" are what are called for, but all such will fail to capture a prize.

Tell or show by sketch how you first met your affinity.

Draw or tell it as well as you can and tell as briefly as you can. Your answer must be on a post-card, and answers inclosed in envelopes will not be considered.

Address your post-card to the Post-Card Editor, BOSTON AMERICAN.

For the best answer sent during the week a prize of $5 will be given. The next best answer will receive $2, and the next three will win $1 each.

Amateur artists who draw their answer should use black ink—not blue black—and attempt outline pictures only.

Some Postals from Aspirants for the Prizes

FOLLOWING are some of the best postals received to-day in answer to the question: "Where did you meet your first sweetheart?" Many answers received to-day were inclosed in envelopes. No envelopes will be opened. Only post-cards will be considered.

PLENTY OF CIRCUS

I MET my sweetheart the first time at Barnum's circus, and I married her. We have a circus at home now with all our children. We do not have to go to Barnum's show, or any other.

T. F. LUNNEY.

No. 624 Harrison avenue.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The first meeting with my husband was when I was ten years old. I met him at school; he said to me: "Little girl, what is your name?" I replied, "Nellie O'Brien." He said: "Ah! you are Irish, and your blood is hot." I said: "I wouldn't have your old name for anything," little thinking I would ever possess the name.

MRS. ELLEN TAME.

SAVED FROM DEATH

WHILE crossing the car tracks, before the Public Garden, my attention was engaged with a passing auto, and before I was aware a car approached and in an instant I must have been dragged under the car but for the strong arm of that handsome young man I had ever seen, who rescued me from the impending danger. We have since continued our acquaintance, and for the benefit of the unmarried ones I will say he is

BOSTON AMERICAN.

JENNIE MacCLOSKEY.

No. 11 Isabella street, Boston.

NOT AN ILL WIND

ON a windy day, behind a sandy knoll at a Yarmouth resort, I met the boy who blew off his hat. She had been sitting behind another knoll only a few feet away, and I came down the street, dressed in a fluffy Summer dress, holding tightly under my arm a basket of strawberries. I concluded that he was the young artist who "called" on me so frequently when two flights back, so I said, "Howdie do?" He said: "Are you the girl I met this moment?" "Not very well," I replied, and since that time I have been the best of good friends. We have been married four years.

MISS MAE E. M.

No 39 Wilson street, Keene, N. H.

LOST AND FOUND

I BECAME acquainted with my first sweetheart when I lost my pocket book with my name and address in it. This young man who found it called at my home to return it. After he had explained how he found it our conversation led into different things, and we spent a pleasant evening. On departing he said he hoped he would soon find another pocket book of mine, and I shyly told him he might pretend he did the next Sunday evening. He did, and several times after.

MISS ALICE E. NELSON.

No. 238 Silver street, South Boston.

HER PATIENT

I FIRST met my sweetheart in school, where we sat side by side. A few years after I became a trained nurse, and, to my great surprise, my sweetheart was one of my patients. We learned to love one another forever.

M. F.

St. Mark street, Jamaica Plain.

BANANA DID IT

FIVE years ago yesterday I first met the man who is now my husband. In front of the South station I had tripped on a banana skin and upon being assisted to my feet was politely told to always look ahead in all walks of life.

MRS. MATHEWS.

No. 25 Bowdoin street, Boston.

COLLIDED

I first met my sweetheart at a bicycle riding school. We were riding in opposite directions; we wobbled; we collided; both went sprawling in the dirt. He picked me up; I picked him out. We rode on a tandem to the station. We got spliced, and we never regretted our ownership.

KITTY McPHEE.

No. 668 Central street, Franklin.

Conditions of the Post-Card Contest

Tell or illustrate how you met your sweetheart.

Write only on a post-card.

Letters will not be opened.

If you draw, use black ink only and dc outline work only.

There are five weekly prizes: $5 to first, $2 to second, $1 each to next three.

Address Post-Card Editor, BOSTON AMERICAN, 80 Summer street, Boston.

Pimples and Blackheads.

Our New Remedy Produces a Cure in Half the Usual Time.

PIMPLES and blackheads have been described as "internal dirt" and this description contains much truth. You cannot be entirely free from a degree of refinement while you allow your face to be covered with disgusting blemishes.

In business, or in society, a man or woman finds a pimply face to be a bar to success. In business the best positions go to the men of good facial appearance, and in society the woman with a pimply face finds her circle of friends small indeed.

For 36 years the Woodbury Institute has successfully treated this trouble, and opened the doors of society to thousands and thousands of afflicted people who had almost despaired of ever finding relief and perfect treatment now makes a cure possible in half the time formerly required, and success is assured in every case.

Write to-day for question blank and full information; or, better still, call and talk with one of our specialists. Consultation free.

(Dept. K.) 58 Winter St., Boston.

SOME TIMELY TIPS ON STYLES

FANCY gilded buttons are used on the short coats.

The clerical and striped mohairs make extremely attractive bathing suits, with braid and button trimmings.

Puritan Fathers' hats they call those high-crowned models which are so fashionable when trimmed with a tulle scarf and an enormous rose in front.

ABOUT THE KITCHEN

DRIED beans of all kinds are much better when they are cooked in a double boiler.

Food should never be put into the ice chamber of a refrigerator, for it will become more or less tainted by coming in such close contact with the ice.

From mistaken notions many housekeepers wrap the ice in newspaper or a piece of blanket before putting it in the ice chamber, and then marvel that though the ice keeps as well the refrigerator is never cold. When it is understood that the principle of the refrigerators rests upon the melting and evaporating of the ice, the reason becomes plain to any one.

Hearst's Boston American Pattern

GIRL'S FROCK

No. 5,536—This simple little frock was stylishly developed in figured white challis. A fitted lining supports the blouse waist which closes in the back. Shoulder straps fastened to the waist with large pearl buttons add a smart touch to the mode. The full straight skirt is gathered and attached to the waist. WOMAN IDENTIFIES PHOTO AFTER ALMOST A MONTH

Receives Reward for the Shopping Snapshot Which Was Printed August 15.

THE little snapshot of a woman shopper printed August 15, and which has remained unclaimed for nearly a month, was identified yesterday. It took a long time for the photo to locate its rightful owner and it looked like a sure-enough orphan, but publicity won in the end and the picture was eagerly adopted.

The original was Mrs. F. A. Swain of Waterhill Park, Wakefield. Somehow the photo got by when it was printed, but the other day a friend mentioned it in conversation.

Mrs. Swain looked it up and resolved to claim the daily award of $2. It was promptly paid.

While it is better to call and identify your photo as soon as possible after it appears, the BOSTON AMERICAN'S offer holds good all the time. Watch out for the Lovers Man. When he gets you be prompt to claim the reward.

The Original of This Snapshot Will Receive a Prize of $2.

Big Piano Bargains

Roxbury Storage Salesrooms

Swell Bargains This Week. In placing a new piano or selling piece on a piano for our weekly drawing at the close of the month, nothing whatever to do with the matter, other than paying $4.98 by the maker in its own warerooms, but owing to a force of unsolicited circumstances it gets to our storage salesrooms it must bear the carefree tag and the same as the piano whose maker quotes its price at $250, $300 or $400. We are the favorite—the only one who wins is the bright and early customer at our store.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

59 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 8, 1906

An Interview Not in the Herald

They Got What They Asked for, but They Didn't Use It

The New York Herald—don't judge that paper harshly until you hear its sad story—invented two interesting political statements, both of which were carefully copied by those newspapers in Boston which are so jealous of the success of the BOSTON AMERICAN that they never miss an opportunity to lie about its owner.

First, the Herald said that William Randolph Hearst had gone to Mr. Jerome and offered to support him for Governor of New York if he would support Mr. Hearst for President.

Next, it said that William Randolph Hearst had made this same proposition to Judge Gaynor.

Having invented and printed these interesting statements, the Herald sent a reporter to Mr. Hearst to ask him what he had to say. Mr. Hearst asked the reporter to take his statement down in writing. This was the statement:

"Please say that I think the Herald is now devoting to falsehood the space that it formerly devoted to vice."

The Herald asked for the interview and got it, but it didn't print it. So we print it here.

The various falsehoods which the Herald invents and will invent should not, as we said above, arouse too harsh criticism.

You must know that there is a pain in the pocket of Mr. James Gordon Bennett.

Mr. Bennett lives abroad, spending in the Monte Carlo gambling room and elsewhere the money which working people and business men in America give to him.

Until quite recently he was also spending a great deal of money that he got from vice in New York City.

His vicious "personal" columns contributed more than a hundred thousand dollars a year to Mr. Bennett's income.

Mr. Hearst's newspaper, the New York American, undertook to suppress that "personal" column; AND IT IS SUPPRESSED.

Men connected with the publication of the column have been prosecuted. AND IF MR. BENNETT WERE HERE, WHERE THE NEW YORK AMERICAN COULD GET AT HIM, HE WOULD BE INDICTED, AND HE WOULD GO TO JAIL IF THE AMERICAN COULD PUT HIM THERE—AND HE KNOWS THAT.

Any business man with whom you are acquainted will tell you that, when the American forced Mr. Bennett to stop exploiting vice, it hurt his feelings and hurt his pocket seriously.

Remember that fact. It will help you to take a charitable view of Herald misrepresentations concerning the Hearst newspapers, their purposes and policy.

The Automobile Will Make Us More Human

One of the commonest and most disagreeable sights in a big city is that of a strong, brutal human being beating a weak and overworked horse because it refuses to do what it cannot do.

Brutality inflicted upon horses is atrocious. But the bad effect of such unkind treatment of animals on human character is far more serious than the actual physical suffering inflicted.

The perfection of the automobile will do much to improve human beings by taking away from their control and from brutal coercion submissive animals.

Every day, on every street, you may see stupid muscular boys and men jerking with all their might on the tender mouths of poor horses, only too willing to do their best.

This brutal indifference to the sufferings of animals makes us brutal and indifferent in other directions.

With the advent of the automobile and the disappearance of horses from our cities horse slavery will be abolished, and men, compelled to use their brains in dealing with machinery, will soon become more nearly human than they are at present. The practical abolition of the street car horse is one great step in advance.

The abolition of the truck horse, carriage horse, cab horse, soon to come, will complete the dream of those modern and highly deserving abolitionists, the automobile inventors and manufacturers.

Faith's Victory

(Written especially for the BOSTON AMERICAN and the Independence League by Homer Darling Trask, author of "Inspiration from the Granite Hills" and other poems.)

LET us break the chains that bind us,
Leaving all the past behind us—
Lift the curtain that would blind us,
And be honest men amidst the surging throng.
For the impulse of progression
Stirs the strong and brave procession,
To no longer bind themselves to wrong.
And the true force now in session
Will move forward in the fray,
That is sure to have its say
At no far-off, distant day,
For the God of love and power
Guides the great souls of the hour.
Men can see the bonds are breaking,
That so long have held them down,
And the greedy combine's shaking—
There's a fear in every frown.
The "voice of right" is sternly calling
To appease the sights appalling,
By the wealth that seeks but self-renown.
But with strong determination
Of influential combination
There will be extermination
Of the men with power that shame
Our great country's honored name;
As an Independent mass
We can overpower the "class"
That have sought but selfish fame,
And we'll prove that we have souls
By our voting at the polls,
And with courage, faith and might
Stink injustice out of sight.

To the foregoing poem, the author adds the following note:

BELOVED friends and BOSTON AMERICAN:

Written with perfect faith in God that we shall ultimately win, that men of principle will fill all the various political positions now occupied more or less by "grafters." Believing with all the fulness of my heart and soul that God's own chosen people will bring about a condition of affairs throughout the United States that will prove permanent freedom from all that is unjust. My soul will never rest until I have, as an individual, done all in my power with brain, body and soul to fulfil this mission. With eternal loving sincerity, I am with you one and all, with perfect and constant faith that the Independence League will prove gloriously victorious in fulfilling God's behest.

How Willie Got Ahead

By Wex Jones

I.—The Old Term.

NOW, Willie was a dullard; he always wound up last,
And every day by younger kids
disgracefully was passed.
He couldn't tell the capital of Oregon or Maine,
And thought the war with Mexico part of the war with Spain.
He couldn't name a President; on politics
was dumb,
And tried to do his algebra by a homemade rule of thumb.
When told "six fish for thirty cents—how much for half a dozen?"
He pondered and he puzzled till his brains were sore and buzzin'.
His father promised him a knife to head
his class but once,
But Willie couldn't win it, he was such a hopeless dunce.

II.—The New Term.

IMAGINE, then, how Willie felt on getting back to school
To find that he no longer was the class's champion fool.
The kids came up in spelling. "Spell tight," the teacher said.
"T-i-t-e," said Willie; said the teacher,
"Go up head."
"Spell 'dough,'" then said the teacher to the class's brightest star—
"D-o-u-g-h, dough," the youngster said,
and got an awful jar
When chased down to the bottom, while
Willie tried "d-o-."
And much to his astonishment found his stammered effort go.
So Willie got his knife at last and stuck
it in his belt,
Unknowing that his thanks were due to one T. Roosevelt.

Notes by the Way

POPULAR songs will be more enjoyed by the neighbors if you sing them in bed with a pillow over your face.

Never drop anything heavy down the dumbwaiter, either bric-a-brac or language. You never can tell whose feelings may be hurt, and, besides, you can't kill the janitor that way.

* * *

Trolley riding is good exercise, especially when you have to stand on the footboard and hang on with your little finger. Avoid as much as possible getting off when the car starts; but if you are jerked loose, fall in a sitting position and try to look as if you were resting.

Chicken soup will be much improved if faintly flavored with chicken.

When the cat knocks a costly vase off the mantelpiece, don't do anything. If you do, she may bump the other one.

While a young hippopotamus is undeniably cute, hesitate about accepting one as a gift from a friend. He takes up a lot of room in the bathtub.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox

She Points Out That When Physical Charms Fade a Woman Should Cultivate a Repose of Manner

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

HOW many years may a woman count upon for physical charm? The question may seem a trivial one to the serious minded, yet there was never a woman so serious or so spiritual that she did not feel secretly pleased at the consciousness that she possessed physical charm or secretly sensitive at the thought that she was devoid of it.

Physical charm does not always necessitate beauty. Many of the most fascinating women in the world's history—women who have inspired great love and helped mould the destiny of nations—were devoid of actual beauty.

But they possessed the charm of manner and of expression and the subtle magnetic quality which leave the impression of beauty upon the beholder.

When beauty of face and form is supplemented by these attributes the world gives way before it. When it is devoid of them, it is often as ineffectual as a snow image to arouse more than a passing notice.

But even she who is possessed of all the charms must yield her sceptre eventually to time.

What Attracts

MAN, the higher animal, however his development may be aided by culture and religion, finds woman attractive only during the years when she suggests the possible mother.

To the immature girl he is indifferent; the elderly woman he respects for what she has been. But his interest revolves about the young maiden or the ripe matron.

He may be a bookworm and a crusty bachelor; he may despise children and believe in the extinction of the human race; yet, without knowing why, and from an instinct stronger than his theories, his glance rests with pleasure and interest only upon the woman who could perpetuate his species.

We may expatiate upon mental comradeship and preach of spiritual virtues, yet it is the eternal mother in woman which attracts. It does not hold unless the other qualities supplement it.

There are women who seem never to possess the suggestive physical charm so dear to the sterner sex; women who are pronounced spinsters of fifty at sixteen, and there are others who seem to retain it into old age.

Cultivate Repose

AMERICAN women are wonderful in the present day for their skill in looking and seeming young at a time when their mothers were old ladies. I have never yet seen a middle-aged French woman who possessed a vestige of youth, yet history has it that a French woman—Ninon de l'Enclos—retained her physical attractions to the age of eighty.

At one of our army posts, a few years ago a woman, who became a reigning belle, was discovered by investigating rivals to be past fifty years of age.

To the young girl of fifteen, twenty-five seems old age. Yet, when she reaches twenty-five she finds herself in this era of prolonged youth in the very morning of life.

To the woman who has found her happiness only in the light of men's admiring eyes, the passing of physical charm is a tragedy.

The greatest tragedy, however, is when she fails to realize what is patent to all observers, and when she demands from men, by coercion or strategy, the attentions she once received as voluntary tributes to her attractions.

Repose and dignity are as essential to age as the Indian Summer to the dying year. They should be cultivated with the advent of the first wrinkle.

A Novel of the West

(Written in the Prevailing Style)

THE desert lay purple under the fierce sun, which beat down upon it like an automatic carpet beater. A rattlesnake here and there idly rattled itself to sleep, while an occasional lizard lizzed quickly from rock to brick. The bloom of the lilac cactus attracted a few bees, and a hummingbird, more than usual of a hummer, pecked daintily at the fruit of the wild peach tree.

It was a typical day in the West, the great, glorious West, where men are men, women are women, weather is weather and strangers are few.

Suddenly a figure dashes into view. It is a woman, mounted on a superb thoroughbred!

Irrigation Ike brushed a rattler from his neck and rose to his elbow.

"The new schoolmarm," he muttered. "She wins four ways from the jack," he added approvingly.

Irrigation Ike stood up and doffed his hat.

As he did so a bullet clipped his ear.

"None o' that!" said a voice. "I seen her first, and I offers my heart and wages first."

Irrigation Ike glared into the eyes of Green River Bill. Green River Bill glared into the eyes of Irrigation Ike. The sun glared into the eyes of both.

The lady rode on.

"Winner asks the girl to have him," said Irrigation Ike.

"I'm agreeable," said Green River Bill.

Two shots rang out.

Green River Bill fell.

"You can have my derby hat for a wedding present," he gasped with his last breath.

Irrigation Ike galloped after the girl. Soon he caught up with her.

"Will you marry me, miss?" he asked humbly.

"Can't," answered the lady. "Husband won't let me."

"And I've slew my best pal," said Ike sadly.
